

Still Time to Register this Fall

While local public schools are resuming classes you might be tempted to think it is too late to register to home school this fall. There is still time to register with your local public school system or with a church related umbrella school (private school), but you must do so quickly. Since the public school year has begun, attendance officers will soon be contacting families whose children have not returned. Public school registration is open until September 1 with a $20 per week incremental late fee during the month of August. Some umbrella schools still have open registration, but space is filling rapidly. You will also need to pull together your curriculum and follow the other steps on our Quick Start Guide . Most of the essential information you need can be found on this site. Consult the menu on the left side of the East Tennessee Homeschooling page.
